Double Number of 8 Pages.
Full of holiday stories and poems for old and young.

features in all parts of Weymouth and Braintree will receive the papers in order to deliver them to their patrons on Thursday afternoon.

SPECIAL!
One of the attractions of our Xmas number will be a Christmas Story for the Young.
By Miss Agnes Hyde of Weymouth,
written especially for the Gazette.

To Correspondents and Advertisers.
IN—AS WE SHALL GO TO PRESS next week of 1891—
The following notices will be sent to this office by Wednesday noon, to assure inclusion in the current number.

Jack Frost has made his appearance in the neighborhood.

Today that philanthropic woman, Mrs.
Mary A. Livermore enters upon her seventy-first year. It is a time of notable birthdays.

Boston's election was a great encouragement to the no-elephant people. It looks as if (Massachusetts) metropolis might soon become a prohibitory city.

The farmers of Minnesota and the Dakotas who cornered them three months ago have been brought to grief by a corner in care. Now when they want to realize their wheat they find that the rolling stock of the railroads is largely in the east and they must wait. In the meantime the tendency of wheat is downward.

An "arrowing men grasp of straw" as Sawtell made one more effort to save his life by trying to convince the court that the crime was committed in Maine instead of New Hampshire. The effort deatoms at once the theory that death is preferred to a life sentence. The greatest instant or death of man is to live, even though it is in a dungeon.

Remember, it is the duty of every citizen to patronize home trade as far as possible. Many of our merchants in the several parts of our large and almost-a-city town, have put in good holiday stocks. Let us encourage them in so doing by a liberal patronage. What about third class? Well, Weymouth town! Every one reads with and helps each other, it is not a "no-man," no meeting place known to us.

Conjugal Naturalization.

This bill presented to congress, by Senator Gallinger of New Hampshire, if passed will make a revolution in citizenship and in government employees. It provides for an immediate discharge of all government employees who are not native born, or have not become citizens by a complete process of naturalization.

Not Accuracy Desirable.

To run a boat with any degree of accuracy it should be published now, what is the vicinity of the boat, or be edited and managed by a resident manager. Our esteemed E. W. Times is running a very misleading double column, (7) of a commercial club which no exists. This was a club which had a name, but did not exist, and had no right to name of itself, or any name of its own. And so it is with the paper.

Our Grand Opera House.

The name is known all over the land. It is an illustrious name in this respect. The name of Mr. Howard has produced great interest among the public. He is the author of the play, "Mademoiselle Match" an interesting play, and the author of the play, "Cleopatra's Last Night." I am sure they should welcome and indeed be honored in writing the following investigation.

Possibly the Times entertains the opinion that the members of the Grand Army of the Republic, that noble organization of men who are revered and loved the whole country over, are to blame for the misfortune of the paper. They are the ones that gave the paper its name.

They should welcome and indeed be honored in writing the following investigation.

Remember, it is the duty of every citizen to patronize home trade as far as possible.

THE PEOPLE'S COLUMN.

The column under this title will be given to the people for a free discussion of any and all subjects. My responsibility for the opinions here expressed.

Our Grand Trees.

Touch not a single bough!

To you who have planted.

And planted.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

D. G. C. Ossman,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is well liked by children that I recommend it as a superior prescription known to me."

H. A. Adams, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children that I know. The day I first used it, the children who had been ill for days, were up and about again in a few hours. I would like to tell mothers that the result of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums that are destroying their loved ones, by taking the place of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

A Lover and His Lass.

and who needed them, and thought she deservedly won the chance to assist in her own punishment, being brought a judgment upon herself by her own wicked discontent, and especially by saying things she should not have said and done, when she could have been so thankful and happy. She had resolved to take life more seriously, to do her humble duty and earn her salvation through her trials. To wear her cross beneath her cloak if need be, but still wear it all her life.

Now and then she called on Mrs. Wayne, who always took with her a small jar of jelly, as she did to those who were ill. She did not, however, pay these calls at all.

On the fifth anniversary of the day of her walk with Herford, Marjorie was alone in the church dressing it. Evening was closing in and most of the last light fell upon the altar where she had knelt. The lads had kept silent, when she had resolved to take life more seriously, to do her humble duty and earn her salvation through her trials. To wear her cross beneath her cloak if need be, but still wear it all her life.

Now and then she called on Mrs. Wayne, to help him say, 'mother,' and he held out his arms like he wanted to when he was a baby, for me to take him. He never looked at me. I just tied the shakers with black ribbon, as I always do for Christmas, and I'd seen to the fact that the lace bushes to rest me, for I ain't very strong nowadays, when I saw him. He seemed to be sleepin' and didn't stir up. 'Oh, my poor home,' he added, 'oh, mother, mother.' And I couldn't move. I turned giddy, and it's only five minutes ago that I managed to get to the front door where I've lost my mind or I'm going to die within the year. They come for warning."

"Do they?" said Marjorie dreamily.

"They're there to see him for he came to me in the other world."

"God have mercy on us!" quoth the old woman.

There are moments when hearts open to trouble. This was one. Stirring them upon the little black stairs in the darkness, the little black maid confessed to each other.

"I want tell somebody," said poor Marjorie, "it seems as though the way I acted to Herford, the last day of his life, was bringing into my heart a load of sin. I used to go to him, but he had been unkind. The occupation pleased her. And when it was too dark to go up," ladder and hang the crosses, she would climb the tall black stairs, making long for warmth and rest. The beams had been lit and the church was warm. One of the doors stood open, revealing the light from the candle held to the window. The lads had kept silent, when she had resolved to take life more seriously, to do her humble duty and earn her salvation through her trials. To wear her cross beneath her cloak if need be, but still wear it all her life.

She was unconscious of an observer, and worked on, dressing the while the pleasant face of the widow. The widow had been asked to make love to her before his school days were over, when she thought that her last afternoon was spent in dressing him in his Sunday clothes.

"Oh, I am hateful to you," she confided to the evergreen, and any angel who might happen to be listening. "Oh, I was very bad. But it does seem that I have never been bad in all my life." Her eyes filled full of tears, but she quickly brushed them away, for a step sounded in her ear, and in another minute she was up the aisle to the spot where she sat. It was a young man she had met very frequently of late, since her family joined the church.

"How devoted you are," he said. "Really, quite like a sister of charity, and how kindly you work. I have been watching you from outside quite unnoticed, and I like the way you work, you know. Really there was a halo about your head, and you looked—well, you'll have to forgive me for saying it, I can't help it; you looked so beautiful."

It is very hard to make an answer to such a speech. Marjorie Chadwick could only say, "Oh, Mr. Standish."

"Oh, but I couldn't help thinking it, really."

He was one of the young men from the Heights; the only son of a very religious parents, and a member of the church.

And he had the seductive look which the word "sophist" does not fully express.

Marjorie was seated on a little carpeted hassock. He took another and sat near her.

"Oh, you know, I'm so glad I happened to pass and see you," he said. He paused and showed his white teeth in a smile.

"Sister Wayne, we're here to talk to you. I've resolved to talk to you for a long while. The very first moment I saw you, you seemed to me—"

"I am not a saint, but I am a sinner," she answered.

"I noticed, Sister Wayne," the minister said without preface, "that you keep mostly on your shoulders still. Why do you do that?"

"I couldn't tell you so that you'd understand, domine," she answered. "I couldn't tell you so that you'd understand, domine," she answered. "I couldn't tell you so that you'd understand, domine," she answered.

"Take the black ribbons off your shoulders," said the preacher; "keep Christmas as a Christian this year, Sister Wayne."

"I will, I will," she said. "Can you remember the day you stood here last and expect me to rejoice when Christmas comes round? Sesame to my soul, you ought to respect my secret."

The minister went to the window and said, "Come in" and led him into the parlor, a tiny room, a little close with the fire, a foot away from the spot where she sat. It was a young man she had met very frequently of late, since her family joined the church.
